Pirate ship craft for toddlers

Contact us • Privacy Policy • Terms of Service • Copyright © Site of 1998-2020 DLTK - Welcome to all rights bookings this week - I made a cardboard DIY pirate ship for kids !!!! Ledted was given a great pirate and a great pirate ship for him, and he wouldn't let PipKeek play (especially with new toys, as kids sometimes do). So I bought her some pirates (I thought pirates were the problem). Afterwards, he asked, Mummy, can you make a pie bark too? This was about four weeks ago. And * finally * I found time during the Easter holidays to get crafty for kids. And this is our DIY pirate ship Howe! hope you like it! I love this pirate ship sent to us by Facebook leader Andrea C! thank you for sharing the photo. This cardboard pirate ship was first shared in April 2012, updated and re-published for your convenience! DIY pirate ship method - material: cardboard (I used a medium delivery box), masking tape, newspaper & paper mace paste (here is a recipe for easy homemade paper mache), scissors, paint, glue, two sticks (for masts), dough odds (I used some old suit fabric from Englishman and white felt) Some of the varnish materials are optional - likewise, you don't need to add a layer of paper mache, but I think it will add stability! My kids still enjoyed playing after more than six years. They are a bit expensive, but I would say great COLLEGETORS items. Get them here US/UK (affiliate link) The original pirate ship we have is this: how to make a pirate ship from US/UK Cardboard 1) cut out the shape of your basic pirate ship. We had five parts: bottom, both sides, back and deck. I have included dimensions in a rough sketch for you. Really - they are just approximations. It is best to cut your two side panels and back, tape everything together and cut the base and desk to suit your boat. I kept trimming a little bit for a good fit! 2) Cut port holes on your side and back of your DIY pirate ship. I used some nail scissors (which I have especially for craft) because they have nice round curves. Tape your side and get back together. 3) Tape these too after trimming your bottom and deck. The deck is very fragile and is probably the part that benefits the most from paper mache. 4) Cut out 12 cardboard discs - poke holes through them. Make sure the stick fits snugly. Then strong (!) Glue all the discs together with the glue andglue in place of the boat. Add masking tape to protect it (no tape appears in the photo). 5) Now on paper mache! We happened to have a lot of white packing paper lying around, so I decided to use it. Of course, an ordinary newspaper is also fine. Check out our easy, low-cost paper mache recipe. Cut a lot of paper with small fine strips. In particular, start adding a layer of mace on top of the joint. Secure all masking tape - try to give extra hold to the deck. Yes, it's fidgeting, but if you can get some layers of below deck paper to support it, it will give it extra strength. I like to layer my papers in different directions - it's really easy when you tear a newspaper apart, but do you know how to shed tears in one direction, not the other? I do this especially in the area of stress and weakness - for example, I layered extra around a circular disc. 6) Let dry. Then paint. The kids chose blue!7) Let's dry again and add more details - I painted on some skulls and crossbones and anchors. I first drew some on paper, cut them out and traced them with a pencil. 8) Let's dry and varnish (I used Mod Podge, varnish does) 9) Make a sail: I used a rectangular ish piece of black suit fabric. I sewed the edges. Across the top, I left the seams wide so I could insert the stick. Near the middle, I cut out the dough, threaded it through some thongs and tied the sails to the mast! Complete making pirate ships with cardboard. Enjoy! I'm sure over time I'll add ladders and crow's nests. But for now, we're done! Remember that paper mache is an option.
